Eva's Story: When Messages Spread

- Eva says she knew she was saying something inappropriate but still said it — even though she probably wouldn't have said it to someone in person. Have you ever had a similar experience? What have you learned about talking online as you've gotten older?

- Why is "deleting" something online not a foolproof strategy?

- Eva says that it's easier to experiment when you're online. What are some ways people your age "experiment" with different personalities on the internet?

- Do you get the sense that Eva regrets what happened?

- In what ways does sharing on the internet feel like writing in a diary? In what ways is it different from writing in a diary?

- What are some of the ways that information or conversations shared online but meant to be kept private can become public?
